AN OPEN LETTER TO OUR CUSTOMERS

SUBJECT: Delivery Schedules

One of the greatest challenges faced today by model railroad manufacturers is delivery scheduling. Please read the following to gain some insight into this issue. Over the years, beginning in the mid-1990's, there have been many significant changes in the model railroad industry. Five of the most important are:

1. The availability of mass quantities of product from off-shore manufacturers
2. The use of Advance Reservations by manufacturers to determine production quantities
3. The transition from kit building to "ready-to-run" completed models
4. The introduction of microelectronics into the hobby
5. The influence of the internet, including social media, on the hobby

Many people within the industry were surprised by the acceptance of ready-to-run products. A majority of model railroaders have jumped on board and transferred their kit building time to completing their layouts, introducing microelectronics into their hobby, and having operating sessions, among other things.

From a manufacturing standpoint the changes have been equally as impressive. Over the past twenty years, due to the availability of manufacturing capacity off-shore and the advances in manufacturing technology, more different models of prototypes have been made available to the hobby than have ever been available in the past. In addition, the models produced have been super-detailed compared to past models and the prototypical accuracy has increased nearly every year. All of this "progress" has been readily accepted if not demanded by the modeling community.

More manufacturers, taking advantage of the off-shore capacity, are producing more and more product than ever before, creating a "glut" within the industry. There are so many product options that most brick and mortar hobby shops can no longer stock some of everything that is produced. For the first time in the history of our industry modelers have to make decisions based on photo images or, in some cases, on the reputation of the manufacturer. From the manufacturer's point of view Advance Reservations have become an important part of the process in determining production projects and quantities. Beginning in 2006 InterMountain has used our Advance Reservation process to fairly accurately determine production quantities, making it possible for us to manage inventory. From experience we know it would be a disaster to go back to the old method of "guessing" how many of each item to produce. InterMountain's Advance Reservation is a "soft", customer-friendly system in that the reservations are only an indication of interest in the product. No commitment is made by our customers at the time they place the reservations. They choose at the time of delivery whether they still want the product. Please note, our customers are under no obligation to take the product if they do not have a need for it at the time of delivery.

That brings us to a most important discussion; that of delivery time for product releases. While many of the factors causing erratic delivery times are out of our control, we apologize to our customers for not keeping them better informed about the status of projects. We are committed to changing this and will do a better job of advising you of project status on a regular basis. In order to do this we will be making some changes in the process we use in defining status. A page is included with this letter outlining the new process that will appear in both the Advance Reservation section and the complete product listing on our website. This same status information will be available personally from InterMountain representatives when you contact the Company. We will endeavor to let you know as soon as possible whether or not a particular project will be produced and where it is in the production cycle. In the cases when production is questionable, we will notify you so you have a chance to increase reservations to the point where production is possible. Please keep in mind that manufacturing is a fluid process but we will do our best to clearly define the status as it moves from one stage to another.

A concern has been expressed that too much products will be released at one time or that there will be "surprises" in delivery making it difficult for modelers to budget for their purchases. If this occurs and we are notified we will set aside a modeler's purchases for a reasonable time awaiting instructions as to when to ship the product to their dealer of choice. In this small way we may be able to assist a few model railroaders to obtain the product they want.

Thank you for your continued support of InterMountain Railway Company. Our hope is that together we can continue to make model railroading a pleasurable and satisfying experience.

Product Status Definitions

Manufacturing is such a fluid process, we will NOT post anticipated delivery months on the website any longer. Instead we will indicate the current status of the project/product, which will be updated as new information is available.

In order to more clearly communicate the status of each InterMountain product, we will identify the different states that the project is currently in.

The states and their definitions will be:

Taking Reservations: The project has been announced, and is available for Advance Reservations to be placed. If a reservation is placed within the first 90 days and the project is produced, the customer can be guaranteed their choice of road and number.

Confirmed for Production: These items have met the minimum requirements and will be produced but have not been entered into the Production Schedule yet. Reservations are still being accepted for items in this status.

Needs More Reservations: Projects that have been in Taking Reservations status for more than 90 days and have not met the required minimum reservations will be moved to this status, and the status box colored red.

Queued for Production: The project has begun the product development steps (art, tooling, etc), and the production order has been placed with our supplier. Reservations are still being accepted for items in this status.

In-Production: The production run has been scheduled and is in progress.

In-Transit: The product is being transported to InterMountain

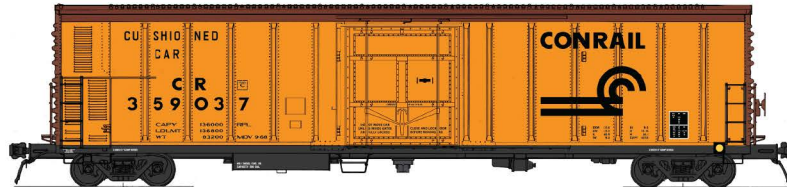

Shipping: The product has been received at the InterMountain facility in Colorado and is in the inspection/packing/shipping process.

Pending Cancellation: The project has been identified for possible cancellation. If the minimum reservations are not received within 90 days, the product will be cancelled. Reservations are highly encouraged to save projects in this status.

Cancelled: The project did not receive the required minimum reservations, and has been removed from consideration. The project may be reconsidered at some point in the future, at which time it will be re-announced and moved to the Taking Reservation status. A "Boneyard" section will be added to the website with a history of all cancelled projects.

DELIVERY SCHEDULES

Be sure to read the included letter regarding delivery schedules. We have significantly changed the process for defining the different stages of the production scheduling. Our hope is that this new approach will answer some of the important questions regarding when and if specific projects will be available.

In 2008, Congress required Class I railroad main lines handling poisonous-inhalation-hazard materials and any railroad main lines with regularly scheduled inter-city and commuter rail passenger service to fully implement Positive Train Control (PTC) by December 31, 2015. PTC uses communication-based/processor-based train control technology that provides a system capable of reliably and functionally preventing train-to-train collisions, overspeed derailments, incursions into established work zone limits, and the movement of a train through a main line switch in the wrong position.

In late 2015, Congress extended the deadline by at least three years to December 31, 2018, with the possibility of an extension to a date no later than December 31, 2020, if a railroad completes certain statutory requirements that are necessary to obtain an extension.

The InterMountain HO Scale PTC Antenna Arrays are a must have for locomotives operating on any modern post 2008 era HO Scale railroad. These arrays are accurately reproduced, fully assembled, accurately painted, and are railroad specific. Not only are they good for brand new prototypes, but they are also being retrofitted to existing older locomotives that were built prior to the PTC requirements. With these arrays, modern era modelers should be able to equip most, if not all, of their entire fleet of modern locomotives easily by using prototype photos!
