MODERN LOCOMOTIVE PTC ANTENNA ARRAYS

Features: Sharp Painting with Accurate Colors, Railroad Prototype Specific, Fully Assembled, One Antenna Set Per Package

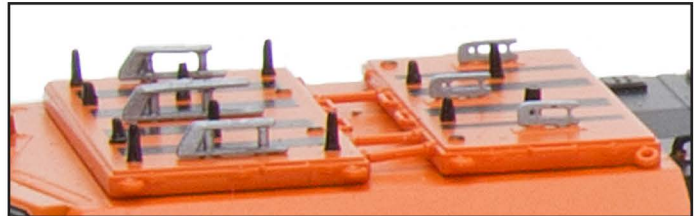

Widespread implementation of Positive Train Control (PTC) systems throughout designated rail lines within the U.S. were the result of the 2008 Rail Safety Improvement Act. PTC systems are designed to prevent certain types of railroad accidents including train collisions, trains operating over authorized speed limits, trains entering designated work zones, and movements of trains over improperly lined turnouts. The basics of the system involve line-side signals and detection working with control units within PTC equipped locomotives. All locomotives that are equipped to lead trains feature a series of antennas located on the locomotive cab roof. These antennas are often on a small platform or within protected housings making this an easy spotting feature to identify locomotives that are equipped to lead. Platform, housing, and antenna types vary from railroad to railroad so a wide variety of looks, sizes, and colors can be seen.
